My Father's Silhouette

by ZhuZiQing

2 For two years I have not seen my father, yet the memory of watching his silhouette from behind is very much still with me. In that winter my grandmother passed away, and my father left his job. It was those days that misfortunate events seemed never come alone. I came home from Beijing to meet my father, and join him in Xuzhou for the funeral. At home I saw dad, and the courtyard being left with messy things. At that moment my thought of my grandmother came through and I couldn't hold back my tear. "What happened had happened," Dad said. "Don't be so sad. There are always some ways out."

3 Back to home we sold valuables to pay back old debt, then borrowed more for the funeral. Financially the prospect didn't look good, partly because of the funeral, and partly because my dad had become redundant. To look for jobs my father wanted to move to Nanjing. I needed to return to my study in Beijing. Together we started out the journey.

到南京時，有朋友約去遊逛，勾留了一日；第二日上午便須渡江到浦口，下午上車北

去。父親因為事忙，本已說定不送我，叫旅館裡一個熟識的茶房陪我同去。他再三囑咐茶

房，甚是仔細。但他終於不放心，怕茶房不妥貼，頗躊躇了一會。其實我那年已二十歲，

北京已來往過兩三次，是沒有甚麼要緊的了。他躊躇了一會，終於決定還是自己送我去。

我兩三回勸他不必去；他只說：「不要緊，他們去不好！」

我們過了江，進了車站。我買票，他忙著照看行李。行李太多了，得向腳夫行些小費

，才可過去。他便又忙著和他們講價錢。我那時真是聰明過份，總覺他說話不大漂亮，非

自己插嘴不可。但他終於講定了價錢，就送我上車。他給我揀定了靠車門的一張椅子，我

4 We arrived at Nanjing and stayed to joined my friends for a tour. Next morning we crossed the river to Pukou to catch up an afternoon train travelling north to Beijing. Dad already told me he was busy and would not able to see me off. He got hold of staff in the guesthouse whom he knew well and let them help me to the journey. He gave instructions to assure himself in every details. But he hesitated, worrying that the staff may not done the job good enough. Actually it was not a great deal to me, for already at the age of 20 I have been travelling to and fro Beijing twice or more. Still my father, after a while of hesitation, finally decided that he better go with me. I tried to convince him, for several times, that he didn't need to see me off himself. "It really doesn't matter to me," he explained. "They won't do good!"

5 We crossed the river and arrived the train station. While I went out to purchase the train ticket, my father was busy working on the luggages. Because there are plenty of luggages we need to hire porters. My father negotiated the fee with the porters. But I was then so full of myself, immediately felt his clumsiness in the conversation, and would like to intervene myself. Finally dad had agreed a fee and he sent me off to the train. He picked a seat near the train door, ...

... and I set over the seat chair the purple coat that he gave me. Dad told me to take care in the journey, beware at night time and not catching the cold. He also gave instructions to the guesthouse staff to look after me. Inside me I actually teased him of his naivety. What the guesthouse staff would only know was money, it was a waste to put a trust on them! Afterall I was already a grown up. Can I not look after myself? Well, now thinking back, I was being too clever.

6 "Good bye, Papa." I bid farewell. My father took a glance outside the coach. "Stay here, don't move around," he said. "Let me buy you a few oranges." I looked over to the platform, where outside the fence there are hawkers selling things and waiting for customers. But to land on the platform at the other side one must cross over the rail lines, and need to jump down and climb up. My father was a fat man. Naturally it was a task demanding to him. I volunteered to go, but upon his insistence I could only let him go. I watched my father, who wore a black cap, a black cloth jacket in a dark green cloth gown, staggered towards the edge of the railway. It was not too difficult to lower the body down, the tricky bit was that over the other side he need to climb up the platform. ....

道邊，慢慢探身下去，尚不大難。可是他穿過鐵道，要爬上那邊月臺，就不容易了。他用兩手攀著上面，兩腳再向上縮；他肥胖的身子向左微傾，顯出努力的樣子。這時我看見他的背影，我的淚很快地流下來了。我趕緊拭幹了淚，怕他看見，也怕別人看見。我再向外看時，他已抱了朱紅的橘子往回走了。過鐵道時，他先將桔子散放在地上，自己慢慢爬下，再抱起桔子走。到這邊時，我趕緊去攙他。他和我走到車上，將橘子一股腦兒放在我的皮大衣上。於是撲撲衣上的泥土，心裡很輕鬆似的，過一會說：「我走了，到那邊來信！」我望著他走出去。他走了幾步，回過頭看見我，說：「進去吧，裏邊沒人。」等他的背影混入來來往往的人裡，再找不著了，我便進來坐下，我的眼淚又來了。

..., He clung onto the top with both hands, folded his legs upwards and swung the body a bit to the left. The movement was slight but in a way highlighting the great effort he spent. When I looked at dad from behind, I found myself crying, my tears came down quickly. Afraid of me being seen crying by my father, or anybody else in that matter, I hastily wiped the tears away. When I looked outside, my father had already held the red oranges, walking to return. After crossing the railway lines, he placed the oranges on the ground, climbed down slowly picked up the oranges and walked again. I hurried to help him out when he come back to this side of the station. We went back to the train, and with all the oranges he got he placed them on my leather coat, brushed the dust away from his own coat he seemed easy and relax. "I am off now," he said to me after a while. "Send me a letter when you arrive there!" I watched him leaving, though after a few steps he turned his head round. Looking at me he said, "Go back in, there is nobody inside." I waited, till I can no longer find a trace of him as the image of his back disappearing, joining the flow of crowd. I went inside, sit down, and come my tears again.

1925年10月在北京

近幾年來，父親和我都是東奔西走，家中光景是一日不如一日。他少年出外謀生，獨立支持，做了許多大事。哪知環境卻如此頹唐！他觸目傷懷，自然情不能自己。情郁於中，自然要發之於外，家庭瑣屑便往往觸他之怒。他待我漸漸不同往日。但最近兩年不見，他終於忘卻我的不好，只是惦記著我，惦記著我的兒子。我北來後，他寫了一封信給我，信中說道：「我身體平安，惟膀子疼痛利害，舉箸提筆，諸多不便，大約大去之期不遠矣。」我讀到此處，在晶瑩的淚光中，又看見那肥胖的，青布棉袍，黑布馬褂的背影。唉！我不知何時再能與他相見！
